Clinician-Patient Communication: Why A Caribbean Perspective Matters to South Florida

D. Aarons, M.D., M.Sc., and A. Mullings, M.D., M.P.H.
University of the West Indies, Kingston, Jamaica

2 p.m., Friday, October 31, 2003
Mailman Center for Child Development, Room 3023
Light refreshments

If communication is the foundation of informed consent, then variations in clinician-patient communication hold extraordinary importance in multicultural and other diverse communities. As a regional crossroads, South Florida has much to learn about communication and its challenges across the region.

Dr. Aarons, a bioethicist and family physician, is Associate Lecturer at the University of the West Indies. Dr. Mullings is a Senior Lecturer at UWI.
