

OP-ED

First round goes to Jeb

BY MICHAEL PUTNEY

mputney@wplg.com

FEBRUARY 03, 2015 06:25 PM

IN UTAH: Jeb Bush arrives in Salt Lake City last month to meet with Mitt Romney before Romney bowed out of the 2016 primaries. AP

Some members of the punditocracy wondered if Jeb Bush had lost his campaign chops since he hadn't run for office in years. The answer is in and it's obvious. He's not only got 'em, he used 'em to chew up Mitt Romney.

Jeb's shrewd, early and preemptive campaign moves drove Mitt to impetuously say he was seriously thinking about running again — third time's the charm! — and then in the harsh light of day decide that he wouldn't. It was a very good decision for the GOP and the nominating process.

wouldn't you love to know what Jeb and Mitt said to each other when they met? I'm sure it was cordial and full of elaborate courtesies, as is the practice among the monied elite. But the message from Jeb must have been, not far beneath the surface, blunt: Run if you like, Mitt, but I'll take you out if you do; I've already signed up many of your 2012 donors and hired away some of your best staff. Go forward at your peril. This is a full contact campaign.

TOP ARTICLES

Miami-Dade's first death from coronavirus. Florida's total hits 2,900 as positives rise

Jeb, who will be 62 on Feb. 11, is not part of that younger generation, but he quickly becomes the odds-on favorite. Not that it means a whole lot this far out. We're still 19 months or so away from the GOP nominating convention for the 2016 election. About the only thing we know for sure at this point is that the Republican Party will not repeat its primary folly of 2012 by holding TV debates ad nauseam like the ones in 2012 that made their candidates, collectively, look a bunch of feckless boobs. And damaged Romney badly by the time he caught the brass ring. The last thing the Republicans need in the next go-round is another Herman Cain. Preserve us from the Herminator!

Local news has never been more important

Subscribe for unlimited digital access to the news that matters to your community.

#READLOCAL

But welcome Jeb Bush, who might bring the GOP back to the middle. He's certainly conservative — an excellent profile in the New Yorker recounts just how conservative he was as governor — but he's the antithesis of a tea-party flamer. He's a thoughtful policy wonk, even if you disagree with his policies. He says he won't cave to the wing nuts on two of them, support for Common Core and sensible immigration reform, and I believe him.

He also says he will only run a “joyful,” optimistic campaign if he runs, and I believe that, too. Jeb learned a valuable lesson when he lost his first run for governor to Lawton Chiles. There was something of the stern, arrogant, avenging angel to his campaign persona in that 1994 race. After

We may use cookies, beacons (also known as pixels), and other similar technologies (together "cookies") to offer you a better experience, serve you more relevant ads, and analyze usage. By continuing to use this application, you consent to the use of cookies in accordance with our Privacy Policy.

ACCEPT COOKIES

Democrats who stood up to him during his eight years in Tallahassee were pummeled, but even some of them came away with grudging respect for his intellect and discipline. Ask former state lawmaker Dan Gelber of Miami Beach.

Doctrinaire liberals who endured his governorship can't abide Bush. They make faces when you just mention his name, as if a foul odor had suddenly entered the room. The main reason for their dislike is the Terri Schiavo tragedy, where Jeb tried to have the state intervene and keep her on life support when that was always a private, family decision.

The other main objection from Democrats was Jeb's success in wresting Florida's public-education system from the grip of the state's teachers' unions, which had a lock on learning that perpetuated mediocrity. And also made it virtually impossible to fire incompetent teachers. Like pedophile priests, bad teachers were noiselessly transferred from school to school. Jeb pretty much stopped that. Education reform, which he has championed since leaving office, remains his signature issue.

Jeb's campaign theme is a clever one: "Right to Rise." It's alliterative, snappy and has a populist lilt. It's also ambiguous enough so that it can mean something to almost everyone. What's important, of course, is how Jeb defines it. It looks like it's shorthand for an equal-opportunity society where hard work and perseverance pay off for those who play by the rules and government gets out of the way. Except for the last, it's almost Obama-esque.

Judging by the speech he gave not long ago to the U.S.-Cuba Democracy PAC, Jeb's foreign policy will be muscular, realpolitik. He says America's principal problem is that our friends don't trust us, and our enemies don't fear us. Sadly true.

How ironic it is that Jeb's protégé, Marco Rubio, is also taking a serious look at running for president at the same time. He has some qualities and talents that Jeb lacks; Rubio is much the superior public speaker. He can really get an audience emotionally involved, especially when he gets going on his American exceptionalism riff. Rubio also has that shiny, new-car smell that appeals to voters who are tired of the same old brand names. Like Bush. Rubio's lucky, too, that he speaks accentless English and that his name is so ethnically neutral.

Would tea-party xenophobes be so willing to applaud José Velásquez Rubio? I doubt it.

Look for Jeb to formally announce his candidacy in the next few weeks. Then will come his biggest challenge: convincing voters who don't know him that he's not a younger version of George W.

COMMENTS ▾

Miami poet Richard Blanco's tribute to Orlando: 'One Pulse — One Poem'

VIEW MORE VIDEO →

TRENDING STORIES

Desperate shoppers not desperate enough for odd foods on picked-over grocery shelves

MARCH 26, 2020 12:22 PM

Feds charge Venezuelan President Maduro, other top officials with narco-terrorism

MARCH 26, 2020 9:40 AM

Miami-Dade, Broward issue new orders urging residents to stay home amid COVID-19

MARCH 26, 2020 3:41 PM

SPONSORED CONTENT

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

What happens when condo neighbors test positive for coronavirus? Miami is finding out

MARCH 25, 2020 8:00 PM

We may use cookies, beacons (also known as pixels), and other similar technologies (together "cookies") to offer you a better experience, serve you more relevant ads, and analyze usage. By continuing to use this application, you consent to the use of cookies in accordance with our Privacy Policy.

ACCEPT COOKIES

OP-ED

Honor the heroes of the war against coronavirus with a national monument | Opinion

BY MARKOS KOUNALAKIS

MARCH 26, 2020 04:40 PM

Doctor, nurses, other healthcare practitioners are on the front lines of the coronavirus crisis, putting themselves in danger to save lives. It's not too early to start planning a national monument to their heroism.

KEEP READING →

Local news has never been more important

#ReadLocal

Subscribe for unlimited digital access to the news that matters to your community.

#READLOCAL

MORE OP-ED

We may use cookies, beacons (also known as pixels), and other similar technologies (together "cookies") to offer you a better experience, serve you more relevant ads, and analyze usage. By continuing to use this application, you consent to the use of cookies in accordance with our Privacy Policy.

ACCEPT COOKIES

OP-ED

Public hospitals giving their all to save lives. But they need help to save themselves | Opinion

MARCH 25, 2020 9:47 PM

OP-ED

Climate change requires the same global urgency as the coronavirus pandemic | Opinion

MARCH 25, 2020 4:19 PM

OP-ED

If Congress gets it right, the coronavirus stimulus bill will be worth the delay | Opinion

MARCH 25, 2020 1:51 PM

OP-ED

Coronavirus is just one more challenge. Americans will beat this pandemic | Opinion

MARCH 24, 2020 10:48 PM

OP-ED

South Florida academic heads step up to lead community through coronavirus crisis | Opinion

MARCH 24, 2020 6:28 PM

SPONSORED CONTENT

Credit Score Under 700? Make These 5 Moves ASAP

BY THE PENNY HOARDER

Take Us With You

Real-time updates and all local stories you want right in the palm of your hand.

MIAMI HERALD APP →

VIEW NEWSLETTERS →

SUBSCRIPTIONS

- Start a Subscription
- Customer Service
- eEdition
- Vacation Hold
- Pay Your Bill

LEARN MORE

- About Us
- Contact Us
- Newsletters
- News in Education
- Public Insight Network
- Reader Panel
- Archives

ADVERTISING

- Place a Classified
- Media Kit
- Public Notices

We may use cookies, beacons (also known as pixels), and other similar technologies (together "cookies") to offer you a better experience, serve you more relevant ads, and analyze usage. By continuing to use this application, you consent to the use of cookies in accordance with our Privacy Policy.

ACCEPT COOKIES

We may use cookies, beacons (also known as pixels), and other similar technologies (together "cookies") to offer you a better experience, serve you more relevant ads, and analyze usage. By continuing to use this application, you consent to the use of cookies in accordance with our Privacy Policy.

ACCEPT COOKIES

<https://www.miamiherald.com/opinion/op-ed/article9145133.html>